ALBERT was at feast iwenty-Islx before he first began to realize that some of the mountain tops toward which he had directed his footsteps were not going to be so accessible as he had dreamed, Gilbert had come from an achleying family. His father, up to the week of his death, had been one of the most important barristers in town. His mother had practiced law in a highly successful way up to the last year of her life. His brother, at thirty, was already a surgeon of more than local Importance. His sister, a college grad mate herself, had married one of the outstanding bio-chemists of the world. So It was by background, environment, example and possibly inher-Itance that Gilbert, even before he was finished with college, should turn his footsteps resolutely toward acom-

It is true that the subject of law had never particularly interested him. He had not a systematic mind. The conception of Ideas interested him more than their execution, and if he had any preference at all, it was for lying for a large part of the day be fore a good fire, or a sun-kissed mendow, and reading, But a man cannot foster such inelinations if he hopes to get ahead in this world. Gilbert knew that. Unless you had a marked talent of one sort or another, the safest road to achievement lay along lines of one of the substantial, remunerative professions. Medicine, Law.

With his slender talent for writing, the best he could probably hope for would be a journalistic or editorial

And so It was that Gilbert turned to law. It was not that he did not bring a fairly average equipment to this work. He had a good mind, even an unusual endowment of Intelligence. and every law office of the city was open to the son of his father.

The secret of his fallure to progress, along about the time he was twentysix, was a subtle yet a fundamental one. It s heart was not in his work, Intellectually, he wanted to be a successful lawyer. Emotionally, he yearned for the blue days at Capel, where he had been taken as a young boy on his first trip abroad. He yearned for the sweet indolence of that kind of tire, with perhaps a pad and pencil at his beek and call, so uat ne could write as a diletiante writes, from impulse rather than ambition or necessity. The instinct to struggle was not in Gubert, and yet, surrounded as he was by the examples of successful people, he had not the courage to let go. And so for four years after these first realizations began to dawn disquietingly upon him, he struggled alread at a profession that was flavor less to him. It was impossible to plead a rase with fervor about which you felt so dispassionately.

The claims of one set of human heings against another could not, did not, interest him, The cuming, devious, shrewd phraseology of the contract, so fascinating to some types of mind, elicited no real interest from Gilbert. The ramifications of the law, Its interpretations and its practice. properd in him nothing more than a weariness for the rather purposeless struggles of mankled against man-

At thirty, on an impulse he was never thoroughly able to comprehend nor the amount of rourage that went with it-- Alibert resigned his position as junior partner in a wellknown law firm, left superficial explanatory notes to a few of the memhers of his family and his friends. drew out a saving account of some several hundred dollars and took a ship going Mediterranean way. That was the beginning of afteen tears of wandering over the houry face of the heary earth. Lingering, when necessary, in one city, in one port, in one village or another, long enough to lay up, by simple mannal latter, sufficient money to sustain him for a brief period of the future. Those of his friends who happened to encounter him in their travels, described him sadly as a pale, draggled fellow wandering almiestly across the face

In a way, that was how Gilbert resarded himself. White the new life cas far, far preferable to the old, and not a regret lucked in his beart, et the same than there was also a faillity, on nimberstone, a section after he knew mit whith. They higher to come out to his hole and a charge was upon his back. Even the variety of their money new force, begin to will. The except ora of his disconlent was man tim.

It was not that the fillion verses following his decision had been no opby ones. On the contrast, they had been rich, fruitfol, sichling ged advecturous. The university of the uni tiese had been follown figurationly and therally operating, he had trept cap, whether with an appetite for for relation, for experience, for are. palate, as the sweet, mocking eyes of exotic women beckoned him, as he lived and learned and suffered, that after all he was getting nowhere. And that, for one who has made the kind of momentous decision that Gilbert had fifteen years before, is a disheartening realization. He had sacrificed everything. Weil and good, but only if the sacrifice had been just?

Whither? was the question that began to engrave itself ackily into the heart and wind and the consciousness of the wanderer. Presdom and what to do with 11? Lalerge and whose to spend It? The world his planaround and where to play?

He was always coming, he was always going. Maidens smiled at him out of their casements. They had homes. They belonged there. They were rooted to some soft. Everybody, It seemed to Olibert, was rooted to some soll and even though the men with whom he came in contact in the cities and along the countrysidesfamily men with responsibilities—ilstened with wistful eyes as Gibert recited his adventures, they were secure men, surrounded with the intangible nura of belonging.

It began to dawn upon Gilbert that he belonged nowhere and yet that was not what was bothering him. He would not, had he been able to manipulate backwards the magic time-carpet, have returned to the life he had so debonairly discarded back in his youth days. If certain dissatisfactions, nostalgias were upon him, they were not those of regret.

He was sick with quest. Neither must you think that in all these years Gilbert had been without the pastimes, the amours, the gratifications that have to do with women. He had crossed the paths of many and they had left their memories upon him. Yet, at forty-five, Gilbert, fallure, was still seeking.

It was in Naples, of all places, when Gilbert was forty-eight, that he ran across, in the open market place, a girl named Chita. She was selling lemons out of a big beautiful basket and she had driven in that morning with them piled on a donkey cart, from the incomparable hills of Amala. She was beautiful in a brown, Italian way, no stripling of a girl, but with a blown maturity to her. Rich, rather dusky skin and white teeth that

It was div sleurd to be placed over the Perio de l'Enfer. The idea of fusblumus was largely due to Rollo's richt to Ruly in 1875, The scalpfor was commissioned by M. Turquet, who told Rodin that he wished to have a work tor the proposed palace of decorative arts. The "Thinker" is part of Ro-din's "Magnum Opnis." At the salon or 1964 the lighte was on exhibition. It was planned to be placed on the upper crossbeam of the gate of hell, where the "Thinker" could look downon the secrees of human passion and? woe extended below him. By public subscription the statue was ultimately purchased and presented to the city of Paris.

fond of calling their city. Like Reglin, Vienna and other European cities, Leipzig has added variety to the swords into-ployshares legend By razing its old buttlements into boulevants. Its Hing-Strasse, built where erin walls rose once, surrounds the fold city in the center of which is the fair market. To the east is the line Book Exchange building which annually attracts bundreds of publishers. Lelpzig is the unbitshing center of rmany. More than 500 periodicals eminate from this town. That it is also a millishing center for all Europe is seen in the fact that 11,000 publishers have representatives in Leipzig. It is, in fact, one of the outstanding mulishing senters of the world.

On the edge of town, almost on the battle site where Napoleon's defeat in the battle of puttons foreshadowed Waterloo, is the university. Many Americans have studied medicine and other subjects in these halls made famous by Goethe. Tourists today are shown Auerbach's beer cellar where Goethe, the student, made merry and drew Inspiration for Faust from old mural palatings. A bidden door discloses an underground passage from the beer cellar leading directly to an old university building!

He hunched himself over on his shoulder so as partly to conceal from Puddingface what he was doing, and extracted the letters under cover of the bedelothes and began to read them. Two facts became obvious. They were in French, and they were love letters. Harold summoned up his half-forgotten matriculation French and began to read them. He made slow progress, for the handwriting was slovenly and there were numerous words flarold did not know. From the context, however, It slowly became apparent that they were words unlikely to appear in any dictionary. In fact the letters were love letters of the grossest and most besotted kind imagluable. Harold peered at the signatures. They were complicated, and enmeshed in a web of flourishes. Most of the inter ones were merely words of endearment-just as a man might sign himself "your ownest ducky" If he were fool enough, thought Unrold-but others were definitely signed with a name. That name, Harold decided, after prolonged examination, was Raphael. Then came the turn of the addresses. The early letters were willten on printed paper from some hatels or other in Paris-to Elarold one Paris hotel meant the same as any other Paris hotel-but the others were-"Goodness gracious," said Harold to himself for the second time that mornlik-were addressed from Le Palals du Rol. Muhlbed-Menkhest. Harold plunged into what he know of postwar geography, and managed to grasp Muhlhad-Menghest was the capital of the Danublan kingdom of Lesser Avaria, sometimes known as the kingdom of the Hons and Aura. And-yesgoodness gracious goodness—the present king of the Hung and Avars was Raphael, Raphael Metapodivitch, That explained a good deal, although not everything, of course. It explained why people were willing to risk their lives in revolver battles for the letters, for they would obviously be worth millions in blackmail while their publication would mean at least revolution and mathe a war or two

"We'll be late for dinner if we're not careful," said Puddingface, casually, sticking a leg out of the bederothes, "Dinner?" said Harold. He boked at his watch, but for the secon? time in three days he had forgoned to

"Past twelve, anyway," said Poddingface, reaching for his trousen. Harold was busy shortes the case I letters down into the bottom of the ed where the might lie biddes write was dres le :

Standing in his vest and pants he took the case to his hands. The steap had broken hetween two holes and it was a simple matter to spiles it together with a screw in coff link. Then he put the case over his simulders and put on his shirt. He realized that the letters were precious and ought to be looked after, even although he did not propcrly appreciate vet the fact that they were considerably more dangerous to their possessor than twice their weight

As Unrold shaved a gradual feeling of better being came back to him. It certainly was enther good to have some adventures sometimes. It would be blee to return those letters to the king of the Huns-he would probably receive a royal letter of thanks in exchange, or something equally spiendid. Harold had acquired from Greataunt Matilda a proper respect for the Lord's anotated, even if they did write olthy letters to Parision onchantresses.

And Marjorie. Harold became conscious that he was urgently authors to see Marjorle henin, although in his unfortunate newly avakened condition of half an hour ago he had felt Just the opposite. He wanted to see her smile, and to feel ogain the lauch of her little time on the check. He promptly decided to call at Ashford road immediately after dinner, and the your thought onlevened his breath and made a cow man of him. Mrs. Pound's remarks, barbed questions from Marks and Orietly as to how he enjoyed him-welf last night, threadbare witticisms from Danvers about black eyes, they all rattled harmlessly off Harold's armor of new things to think about. a murder and a royal scandal on one With dinner over, Harold decided to selzed his hat and issued forth.

There were two strongers in Scae fell avenue as he went along it. He hardly noticed them, but they looked keenly at him as he passed. Both were fairly smartly dressed, and one was obviously English. The other was a foreigner. The two looked at hlm, exchanged a word together, and then the foreigner turned casually back and walked in the same direction us Carold fifty yards belind him, while the other continued to stroll. very slowly, down Scae Fell avenue. Harold's way took him under the rallway bridge (how well be remembered staggering under it last night. half dend!) and out once were across Marley common. Harold looked keenly and with interest for traces of last night's battle. There were not many. On the payement where the cars had stopped werê two dark marks. na 🗺 made by drops of blood. Along the footpath where Harold had stood was n dark smear in the dust, which also might have been blood, but the dust was too thick for it to be obvious. No casual inspection would reveal last pight's doings to anyone.

The autagonists must have carried of the dead man and made all whipshape as soon almost as Harold had escaped. Harold felt glad of that; he was not at all anxious to be mixed up in a murder trial, and he cared neither one way nor the other apart from that as to whether justice were dealt out to the slayer. He had taken a chance, just as had the man who was shot, and it was no concern of anyone's, least of all Harold's, to load the dice against him after he had been lucky enough to win the first

Then he came to Ashford road, and quickened his step with a touch of pleasurable unticipation. He knocked at the door and waited, anxiously but happily.

Alas, alas for Harold! Cerberus in the form of Mrs. Tilling opened the door to him, call promptly flew at blm, anapping triple-jawed. Harold qualled and wilted before the violence of this offensive. No, he could not see Marjorle, and if Mrs. Tilling could fleeting memory by the tall. Yes, | manage it he would not see her again, either. She was in bed, worn out and with a shocklag cold acquired by tramping over the country with a lout who ou lit to have known better, and by rides to motor cars which could only be the necompaniment of the worst kind of sin.

The very idea! (This was in reidy to Harobi's timid suggestion that he might be allowed to address a few words to Marjoric, under Mrs. Till-Ing's chaperonage, through the crack of her door.) That showed the sort of man he was, undoubtedly. Harold could clear off and not soll her doorsten ngain. Mrs. Tilling, deunk with power, and with Marjorle in bed, in full command of the situation, slammed the door. Harold remained before it for two seconds standing on one foot, shifted onto the other one for another two seconds, and turned relaciantly away. The world was a dark and unhappy place, all of a

At the corner of Ashford road the foreign gentleman was doing up his shoelace, and only ceased the opera-tion as Harold walked past him on the Common again, but It did not make much impression on him. Truth to tell, he had forgotten that a king's ransom nestled against his spine; his thoughts were too full of a chit of

He made his serrowful was over to the bench on which-goodness nonclous, it was only two days ago: it seemed more like two years-he had made the memorable promise to escort Marjorle late the country. He est down and devoted a scloon half, hour to making himself more roiserable than ever. He could not see Marjorie. He could not go to the club. He was worried and bothered. He did not know what he ought to do next. What should a roung wan do when he to dented secess to his lady love by a termanant of a conc diant. He made up his mind to write to Marbaria. He beared bleezele of file bench and Logian to stride back to Road Poll View, with his spirits faintle raised by the prospect. And a man to foreign cluther at the same time rates. The first thing that enught Harda's dingface. Puddingface's bands were tled behind his back. With a heave and a wriggle he rose to his knees on Not every one encounters first love, the bed. His head was lost in a green balze bag (part of Harold's property). which was fled round his neck, Just about where Puddingface's mouth go at once to Ashford road. He would he a white handkerchief was fastened tightly about his head, giving the effect of a vast mirthless grin extending all the way about Puddingface's green balze head.

Puddingface's feet were tied as well as his hands, and after poising balanced on his knees for a few wild seconds he pitched forward onto his nose again (if, indeed, there was a nose within that green baize bag).

By this time Harold began to realize that is was incumbent upon him to release Puddingface from his bonds. He drew out his penkuife and cut the cords which were round his ankles. and untied the handkerchief and the tring of the green baize bag. Puddingface's red and wrathful countenance emerged, as he sat up on the It was a minute or two before he could speak; during the interval he was, engaged in spitting out shreds of green balze and even when he was able to speak his words were not at first wholly intelligible. "The blank blanky blank blank blankers!" he said. "Who are?" asked Harold.

"Danyers and Marks, of course. I came up here after dinner, and as I valked into the room those two olighters jumped on me and fled me op and put my head in a bag and threw me onto the bed. Then they undld all my clothes and threw me backward and forward and turned me upside down and nearly turned me inside out. They think they're jolly funny, the silly swine. Then they went round the room-I heard them-and threw everything about. Just look at the mess they've made."

They certainly had. Every drawer and cupboard in the room had been emptied and the contents strewn about the room. There was a certain system and order in the disorder which started an idea in Harold's mind, which in turn started a whole series of cold shivers down his spine. "Are you sure it was Danvers and Marks?" he asked quaveringly. "Of course it was," said Puddingface; "who would it be if it wasn't them? Mrs. Pound and Emmle?"

"No," said Harold. That was all he ald, but he thought the more. Why, nothing would be easier than for a couple of evil-intentioned people to enter the house while all Seac Fell View avenue was in the threes of devouring or digesting dinner. And the sort of person who would do this was the sort of person who went round shooting people on Morley common, and who would make no bones at all about tying Puddingface up and investimiting his sacred person. I'ndlingface did not realize that he was lucky not to have had his head clubbed en ar a bullet sent through the midlle of the apple ple of which he had just eaten too much. Yet Puldingface, ignorant of his luck, indulged at that moment in a further torrent of

"I'll got even with the swine, see If I don't" blared Puddingface, "D'you know if they're in?" "Afraid I don't," said Harold.

"We could go and muck their room up the same as this if they were on," eald Puddingface: the "we" in thit speech was disturbing to Harole's prare of mind.

"Let's clear this mess up first, for goodness' sake," he said, desperately anxious to postpone the issue, and Pacification agreed sulkily. Of course, it was Harold who cleared up the mes. Puddingfore was too busy standing about saying things. Harold took a furtive glance out of the window; sure enough the forelinlooking man was at the corner of the street, talking to his English friend. Moreover, twenty yards nway from then were standing two more foreignlooking men. He feit suddenly sick and ducked hurrledly away from the

"What on earth can I do?" Harold asked himself pitifully, for the twentioth time that week end. Give the fetters back? But how, and to whom? Who was the rightful owner of the bally things, anyway? That writer or the recipient-the king or the lady? And if he tried to give them back wouldn't the other side bear him a grudge which they would do their best to repay? As far as he could see the only thing he could do was to hang on for a little while and find out what would be hest. If he burned the things neither side would believe he find done so. Police? That was possible. but Harold shrank from the idea of walking into a police station with this fanisatic story of princes and pistol shots. There would certainly be a dreadful senudal, and the murder on the common would have to be investigated with him as the principal withers, and there would be bendlines in papers and photographs and all sorts of uppleasantness. And the bank would of course disapprove very strongly. He might lose his job! That clinched the matter for Iluroid. He would rather be murderously assaulted than risk dismissal. Then the ten bell rang downstates, and Puddingface made a prompt exit.

Harold followed him only two seconds later. The two seconds were the time It took him to bolt and lock the bedroom windows -- he was taking no chaptes. Then be sentiled after Puldinglace. Harold most emphalically dld bot want to be alone.

At leating Paddiagtace, with a tack amazing for him, elicited from Mrs. Pound the information that Mesers. Denivers and Marks lad sone out soon at ar limel and would not be back till

Harold and favored him with a wink and a grin. Harold went on shivering all down his spine. Matters were growing far too complicated. Yet he did not see what he could do when after tea Puddingface grabbed him by the elbow and said in a hourse whisner:

"Come on, now's our chance." Danvers and Marks shared the first floor front, immediately under Marold's room. Puddingface dranged Harold in and shut the door; and then he exploited into action in a simply astonishing fashion.

"I'll show 'em what ragging is," said Puddingface, with the memory of an hour with his bead in a bug and the rest of him exposed to the elements rankling like poison. Harold helped him unwillingly and ineffectively, and, as was evident from the energy Puddingface displayed, unnecessarily. Puddingface began by emptying all drawers and cupboards, piling the contents in a lieap on the floor, and dancing on them. He took the sheets and pillows and blankets from both beds, made them Into a bundle, and tled the corners together with at least fifteen knots. He took razors and combs and brushes and hid them all round the room-on top of cupboards and up the chimney and in vases. He took down all the pictures and placed them between the muttresses and the springs of the beds. He squeezed toothpaste into slippers and shaving cream into pajama pockets. Finally he tied a long string in succession to every china article in the room, each of which he polsed precariously on corners and shelves, and he made the end of the string fast to the leg of a bed so that the bight hung a foot from the floor across the door in such a fashion that a hasty step into the room would bring down every article in turn with a crash.

"Plat'll do now," whispered Puddingface. "That ought to show 'em." It certainly would, decided Harold, appalled! "What are you going to do now?" he asked anxiously.

"Me7 I'm goin" out for a bit. Goin' to see what girls there are on Morley

"Going out?" repeated Harold helplessly. That meant that if he stayed In he would be alone in the house, save for Mrs. Pound. He could not possibly bear that. Out in the streets, or on the crowded common, he would be safe. So would he be at the club. The club? No. Herald decided he did not want to go to the club.

"Shall I come with you?" asked Harold.

How Soil Is "Limed" The term "liming" as generally used means the application to the soil of the element known to cherdsty as calclum in one of two forms-cither calclum carbonate, more commonly known as carbonate of lime, or calcium oxide, the ordinary burned fime of com merce. Carbonate of magnesium mixed with carbonate of lime, as in dolomitic or magnesian limestone, and the mixed oxides resulting from burning such Umestones are included also under the

Japan and China Were Giv en Ornate Nicknames

In the year 671 A. D. the Chines. gave the name Jilipen to the archi pelugo situated east of their empire The first syllable of this name is rep resented by a character meaning sug or light; the last syllable by a character meaning origin, or root. The word is thus translated as "origin of the sun," Japan being east of China, it is easy to understand how the name "Land of the Rising Sun" became applicable to this country, The Japanese, who borrowed the writing and many of their terms from China, adopted this name also, but nodlified its prontuciation to Nilion Another form is Nippon, or Dai Nip

China is known as the Flowery king iom. This is a translation of the Chinese Hun Kuo, and is the most an clent name of China. It is not known whether it originally referred to flow ers in the literal sense, but probabbly dld not. Hua means flowery, elegant, or distinguished. It is supposed that the ancient Chinese so designated their country because they regarded their people as the most polished and civilized in the world. This term may have been employed at one time in the sense of "country full of flowers." According to one theory, the Chinese riginally fived in a very harren region of Central' Asia, and they called thei new country the "Flowery Kingdom" in contrast to their old frome in the desert.

Why Korea Became "Chosen"

"Korea" was the mime given to the country in northeastern Asia by foreigners, particularly Europeans. The Koreans themselves as well as other Orientals preferred to call the country "Chosyon," because that was the old native name. "Chosyon," usually written "Chosen" in English, is from Chinese "Ch'uo Hsien." It was notura: that the Japanese, after they took possession of the kingdom of Korea. should have preferred to call it Chosen.--Pathfinder Magazine. Why Romance Is Vanishing

WHEN the directors of the World Bank for International Settlements met in Busel, Switzerland, they heard from Gates W. McGarrab, its president, that the deposits of the institution have gone past the $400,000,-000 mark. This sum is far in excess of the expectations, and it clearly shows, according to the belief there, that the world bank is becoming something more than a mere depository for the central banks of various nations, so that even if the reparations payments should later be put on some other basis, or cease entirely, the bank would still be certain to continue to function.

The bank has consented to help In putting the Austrian bank, Creditanstalt, back on its feet but it was decided that the initiative must come from the League of Nations committee for control of Austrian loans.

A S WAS predicted, the War Department has decided to abandon wholly or in part 53 surplus forts, camps and reservations. In the list announced by Secretary Hurley are Fort Lincoln, N. D.; Fort Missoula. Mont.; Fort Eustle, Va.; Fort D. A. Russell, Texas; Fort Brown, Texas; Fort Hunt, Va.; Camp Stephen D. Little, Ariz.; Camp Garry J. Jones, Ariz.; Miller Field, N. Y., and Chanute Field. Ill. Of course the abandon ment of these posts may be prevented by indignant congressmen.

How the American army is to be reorganized, developed and modernized was described in an announcement by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff. The plans set forth include ization and motorization throughout the of the cavalry arm by MacArthur the substitution of fighting machines for horses, and the development of powerful tank forces to be attached to army corps or field armies, rather than the infantry, which remains the basic arm.

Some cavalry units with horses as mounts will be retained for use in rough country, but in general the horse as a war weapon is discarded. The mechanized force at Fort Eustis will be reorganized a reinforced cayniry regiment. Combat cars, equipped with machine guns and possibly heavler weapons, which can travel 70 miles an hour on hard roads, are counted on to give the cavalry high mobility.

Despite the more extensive use of machines, the infantry will remain the backbone of the army according to General MacArthur's program.

DESPITE the rebellious Cautonese, Gen. Chlang Kal-shek is still the ruter of China, and when the people's convention closed its twelve-day session in Nanking he made an impressive plea for unity and for co-operation with the government in suppressing banditry and communism.

The principal achievements of the convention were the adoption of a new constitution, which goes into effect on June 1, the declaration of the republic of Ching with its permanent capital at Nanking, and the mandate given the government to carry out the terms of the manifesto declaring all unequal treaties between China and foreign powers null and vold.

FOR many mouths the world has been reading about the first armored cruiser built by the German republic under the linkts imposed by the Versailles trenty. It was described as a wonderful vessel of 10,000 tons so powerful that it was called the "vest pocket buttleship," Well, It was launched the other day at Kiel in the presence of a huge crowd of officials and citizenry, but the event was marred by a conflict of orders that resulted in the ship's being loosed to slide down the ways before President Hindenburg had a change to break the bottle of champagne on its bows and christen it Deutschland. The new ship defies the Washington treaty classification. It is neither a capital ship nor a cruiser but is superior to both. Limited to 10,000 tons, it is much heavier armed than other ships of the same size. It is equipped with six 11-inch guns throwing projectiles weighing 620 bounds. In velocity, which is said to be as much as 26 knots, the new ship is superior to rapital ships. The built of the cruiser is of shallow draft and so minutely compatinented as to make It comparatively safe against for pedoes and mires.
